CHARLOTTE FASHION WEEK

Glamour, gorgeous models and top designer's filled North Carolina's city streets September 18 - 20. The first annual Charlotte Fashion Week was not only a huge success, but it again proved the growth of our city. A diverse cosmopolitan feel has begun to shine across our metropolis. Cameras snapped, reporters interviewed on the red carpet and limousines transporting some of the best top designers lined up outside downtown's Blake Hotel. Models and CFW workers buzzed around back stage, preparing for a show that would be comparable to fashion shows found in big cities around the world. The runway lined with Charlotte's prestige sat anxiously awaiting this seasons creations. The music was infectious and the atmosphere electrifying. From the first designer to the last, the runway was on fire. Attendees and participants became one as they experienced the hot styles emerging from Charlotte. The talent was plenty, from models to designers, press, volunteers, etc... Everyone came together to produce a dynamic show that will serve as just the beginning of Charlotte's fashion renaissance. Our city might not be large in size, but the high profile city lifestyle we are accomplishing is enormous.

Mr. Anthony Simons is currently the owner of Northlink2008 LLC, Director of the Charlotte NC Fashion Week, President of Pines Fashion and Marketing in Charlotte and editor and chief of Everette-Charlotte.com, a new fashion, entertainment, lifestyle, culture and media website for the Carolina's due to launch this fall. Mr. Simons is devoted to creating events that are culturally diverse where the fashion and beauty industry can come together seasonally to show off its unique style and give to the public and media. Further, the company will provide national connectivity as it business networking services to a number of clients in and around the New York City tri-state area and abroad partners to regional locally here in Charlotte.
